has no competitor.

It has been generally admitted, in Conrress and out, that money expended, in sums sufficiently large to insure its completion Within a reasonable time, upon the comprehensive sewerage system proposed in the created by Congress, and which have received the approval of that body, will be a limited variety of pleasure, and this acwisely expended. The protection the plans offer to property now in danger of serious damage by flood, as well as to the health of the people, will be cheaply bought at great deal to secure that boon when the the price of the new system. If the policy right to it has been forfeited, but they are of providing for the completion of the dikes, only rarely impelled to escape by discominterceptors, and outfall sewers by small annual instalments is maintained, the money origin in mere incarceration. An example will practically be wasted, as the system will be outgrown before the work is finished. Then the wisdom of providing for the extension of city streets in the suburban districts, according to a plan that will provide for the expansion of the capital city, with some regard to harmony with the design approved by Washington, and of giving to the already thickly settled suburbs good streets and bighways, has likeeen recognized by acts of Congress as well as the reports of the officers in charge of public improvements, and strongly urged by those interested in the welfare of the District. The judiciousness of expenditures upon these projects at a time when there was a full treasury would not be questioned. Existing conditions instead of making such outlays questionable, really constitute an additional argument for entering upon the works without delay.

A measure introduced by Senator Peffer, already pending in Congress proposes a plan for providing work for unemployed persons in the District in various needed public improvements. The District Commissioners, in sympathy with the benevolent purposes of the bill, have made a report on the meas ure and submitted a substitute for it which would accomplish all the good that Mr. Peffer's bill contemplates, and even more, in the way of providing work, and at the same time would greatly benefit the District by insuring the completion of the much-needed improvements referred to. The plan is suggested of issuing bonds to pay for the work so there will be occasioned no unusual draft on a depleted treasury, and the cost will practically be distributed over a series of years. This seems much wiser financiering than the present plan of constructing by installments a sewer system, which can be of no use until the whole is completed, at a rate which would prolong the work for half a century.

The suggestions in the Commissioners' report and the provisions of their bill, which proposes to accomplish so many good things in different directions, should receive the careful consideration of the District committees and Congress.

Another life having been sacrificed because the mechanically-propelled street-cars operated in the District are not equipped with adequate fenders, it is quite likely that the heads of the various transportation companies will once more announce extraordinary activity in the line of improved compulsion, placed on their cars ingenious devices by which the probabilities of death from collision were materially lessened and by the operation of which it was practically impossible for the car to run over a body as did the Brightwood car yesterday over little Gladys Gilmore. It would seem as though the lesson of corporate precaution should have been learned some time ago, for there have been more than a sufficient number of such awful happenings as that referred to, but the companies appear to be careless and there is altogether too much of that which appears to be indifference among those whose duty it is to hasten action. In other places there are carfenders which have saved the lives of many unfortunates who happened to be in front of rapidly-moving cars. Had those collisions taken place in this city the chances are that every one of the men, women and children who escaped and are now alive and well would not only have been killed, but their remains would also have suffered horrible mutilation. Some day-and it is just so likely to be to-day as any other-a fenderless cable or trolley car will provide the material for a Congressional funeral and then the companies will hasten to equip every car with a fender that can be depended upon to do the work for which it was invented and made. But why wait for

It is a confession of weakness for the friends of Mr. C. H. J. Taylor of Kansas in the Senate to put forth the plea now that he was "only joking" when he made his famous application to Secretary Smith for his commission as recorder of deeds for the District. Mr. Taylor has, since this delightful bit of humor was perpetrated, repeatedly avowed the seriousness of his proposition, and has continued to argue with all earnestness that inasmuch as the Congressional Record stated that he had been confirmed nothing on earth can alter the fact. Is it not time for Secretary Smith now to take a hand in the matter and officially resent the insinuation that he has been made the butt of a practical joke by his facetious acquaintance, the political agriculturalist from the far-away state of Peffer and Lease?

Bismarck and Gladstone both declare that they desire no more public life. Both have been men of extraordinary activity; men whose careers have lasted far beyond the usual period of human usefulness. Both might be claiming the attention from the populace which seems to the mind of the younger politician the thing in life most to be desired, but they have had enough, and they retire gracefully. It is not often that history produces contemporaneously two careers at once so brilliant and so symmetrically rounded.

New York's interesting elephant "Tip" has behaved so badly that it is proposed to kill him. This should be a warning to the rest of the Knickerbocker menagerie, especially the tiger department.

That perennial source of amusement, the harmless trolley wire, has again done something it ought not to have done and will doubtless once more compel its heavilysalaried friends to declare that never in all their experience did anything happen which was so extremely surprising. It seems that sixteen-year-old boy, full of boyish vitality, threw one end of a thin wire with which he was playing over a trolley wire in St. Louis, He will be buried tomorrow. The death of this young man will set the trolley people to explaining at a great rate, and for some time to come the public will be regaled with all manner of statistics as to the phenomenally-feeble electrical resistance of the and horse. deceased and the generally innoxious character of the current; efforts also will be made to prove that for generations past the victim's ancestors were unanimously afflicted with heart disease, and that only the carelessness of the youngster's parents in permitting him to throw wires around promiscuously can be held responsible for the departure of William Berg from St. From the Chicago Record. Louis by the trolley line. Investigators who have insisted and who stall insist that the you don't expect.

Weather forecast for today: Anything that trolley of the overhead variety is not the harmless circulation-quickener which its operators declare it to be, will be interested to know that medical examination of young Berg's body showed that the boy's right arm had been cut, the fingers on his right hand slashed to the bone and one finger burned off. There was also a hole about half an inch wide down to the bone in the boy's left breast, just over the heart, where the other Washington dailies. As a from the wire as the boy's hands were the current must have entered the body News and Advertising Medium it forced up to his breast when he first felt the current. This sad happening corroborates much testimony already in which proves to the satisfaction of thousands of people who know nothing about ohms or amperes or volts, that the alleged-to-begentle electric current with which the overamply strong enough to do murder whenever it has a fair chance. The death of William Berg will be the cause of great grief to the overhead-trolley trust.

studied the prison system of the United States that unhealthy sentiment has so wrought things as to make imprisonment cusation is undoubtedly well-founded in many instances. Of course, most men prefer personal liberty, and will risk a forts other than those which have their of an American prison as a place of residence comes to the surface in the case of Narcisse Nero, an Italian, who for the past eleven months has been a legitimate inmate of the Idaho penitentiary. Narcisse was a burglar who had been sentenced for a year. Good behavior shortened his term one month, but when the warden notified him to that effect and requested him to depart the gentleman from Italy declined to do any such thing, declared himself to be thoroughly satisfied with his home, and assured the officials that it was much more comfortable than any place he had ever that Mr. Nero should go, whether he wanted to or not, the Italian said he was not compelled to accept the month's rebate on his sentence. Governor McConnell coincided with the prisoner, and the chances are that Mr. Nero will remain in the abode of his choice until his full term has expired, after which he will probably commit mother crime, so as to return to to his pleasant quarters. It is undoubtedly true that there are many such as this man in other portions of the country than Idaho some such are in Washington. They would just as soon be in prison as be at liberty. in fact, many of them exhibit a decided preference for prison. This would not be so if prisons were really what they are supposed to be-places of punishment.

Richard Croker remarks that he is tired of being pounded by the newspapers. Truly, the public owes the press some kindly remembrances.

Remnant Day,

Tomorrow, Friday, May 11.

Stock methods in our business positively prohibit remnants accumulating. They must be sold. There is no alternative. That's what our Remnant Day is for-that's its sole object. But the Remnant Day is not a spasmodic sensational method of calling attention to a few odds and ends of pointed. It means remnants of every character and condition—"short lengths," "ends of lines," "broken assortments," "odd and extreme sizes," "small lots," &c., of new, fresh, seasonable goods, as well as solled, mussed, scratched, or imperfect things-(for they are all remnants)-marked at reduced prices. Notwithstanding the reduced prices are half and quarter the original, we put just as much thought, just as much energy into these sales as we do into any others. Hundreds of remnants advertised for tomorrow, hundreds of others throughout the store just as interesting, not mentioned here for want of space. Prices are wonderfully low.
